ANNUAL CHURCH SALE TO BE HELD AT ODD FELLOWS' HALL

The Annual Christmas Sale of the Methodist Church will be held this year at the Odd Fellows' Hall due to repairs of the church kitchen. The Sale is being held a month earlier again this year, on Thursday, November 13, and with only a few weeks left to Christmas, many will find this a splendid opportunity to complete a great deal of their holiday shopping.

The Eleanor Gordon Guild will serve refreshments at the Sandwich Bar, to which the teen agers and other young people are especially invited after school.

A special feature for the children this year will be Santa's Treasure Chests, with their thrilling collections of mysterious packages.

This is the first sale since sugar rationing, and it is expected that the food table will be back to its original pre-war excellence. The Harvest table will offer canned foods, vegetables and fruit.

The Eleanor Gordon Guild will have its popular display of cards, stationery and gift wrappings. The Guild will also assist at the Christmas Decorations booth, where orders will be taken for wreaths to be delivered later.

The fancy work promises to be lovelier than ever, and there will be an unusually large assortment of aprons, handkerchiefs and neckwear from which to choose.

The Children's table, one of the more popular gift sources, will feature clothing and toys for children of all ages, and an array of gifts for babies.

At the Homemakers' table will be found a variety of lovely and useful gifts for the home, including many new and novel ideas.

The doors will open at 2:30 p. m.

Miss Isabelle Bennett has recently been elected treasurer of her residence house, Slocum, at Russell Sage College, Troy, N. Y. Miss Bennett, a member of the freshman class, is a physical education major.

GOULD WALKS AWAY FROM KENNETT, 25-0

Gould Academy annexed its fourth win of the season, against two defeats, when they ran roughshod over Kennett High of Conway, N. H. The line play of the winners showed marked improvement as they held the visitors to 3 first downs. The Huskies garnered 12 first downs and scored four times. Three of the touchdowns were accounted for by Davis who scored from the one, nine, and sixteen yard lines. He also set up the fourth touchdown by a 49 yard run carrying the ball to the opponents 12 yard line from where Dick Melville scored on the next play. Captain Bennett played a great game on the defense as he made tackle after tackle.

Kennett's outstanding performer was their fullback, Seavey. He was a hard man to bring down when carrying the ball and was a strong defensive player.

140 Million Capitalists

"Soak the Rich" used to be quite a popular slogan in some quarters. Whether the same words are used today, the same idea still appeals to a large number of people. The plan put forward by these folks boils down to one main issue: limit the incomes of citizens in the high brackets and divide it among the other people. By putting more money in the hands of more people they hope to attain a greater prosperity.

However, this economic Utopia theory runs afoul of economic fact and economic law. Its basic platform is hinged on the idea that most of the nation's money is held by a comparative few. A greater misconception is hardly possible. In the light of sound reasoning and cold statistics, the absurdity of this notion is obvious. No other civilization has seen a more equitable distribution of wealth among its people.

The People's Money

For example, a tabulation of income tax returns for 1942 shows the full impact of the results of our American system. In that year the group of individuals receiving income of less than $5,000 annually, representing 96 per cent of the country's population, paid 47 per cent of all federal personal income taxes. This, too, is the group which since 1931 has averaged at least 88 per cent of the nation's annual income. In comparison, some 1,321,000 people reported incomes in excess of $5,000 during the same year. This group—approximately 4 per cent of the population—paid 53 per cent of all federal personal income taxes. In the above-$5,000 group, only 22.3 per cent of their income came from interest, dividends, rents, royalties, and annuities. This is a far cry from the well worn "coupon clippers" line of attack of radical planners.

All Groups Share
Curiously enough, the lower income groups are far from being the underdog in distribution of income from these sources. The above-$5,000 group was responsible for 37 per cent of all income from interest, dividends, and annuities, while the below-$5,000 group pocketed 63 per cent of the income from the same sources. The lower income groups have a large stake in the nation's business and industry.

If these planners could limit the incomes of all individuals to $10,000 before taxes and other fixed charges, some $5.2 billion would be available for distribution to the lesser income people. Representing little more than 4 per cent of the national income, it would amount to only $40 per capita—provided, of course, that there had been no economic or financial loss in the process of redistribution.

This would be a costly price to pay for the destruction of incentive, which would inevitably follow. Most "venture" capital would disappear. Since this is the source of all industrial progress, the immediate and certain result would be a breaking down of the national economy, a reduction of national income and of individual income. Freedom of the individual and his unlimited incentive for gain are dependent on each other. This way, everyone benefits.

LOCKE MILLS

Mrs. Mary Mills, Correspondent

The wedding of Miss Jean Tirrell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis A. Tirrell, and Lloyd W. Marston, son of Mrs. Edith Marston of Paris, took place Thursday evening, Oct. 30, 1947, at the home of the bride's parents at Locke Mills. Rev. Kingley Hawthorne officiated using the double ring ceremony.

The bride wore a grey ensemble with black accessories and a corsage of white roses and carnations. She carried her paternal grandmother's wedding handkerchief.

The bride's sister, Mrs. Roger Twitchell, matron of honor, wore an aqua ensemble with black accessories and a corsage of shaded rose carnations.

Fern Tirrell, another sister of the bride, served as ring bearer and wore a suit with a corsage of white carnations.

Roger Twitchell served as best man.

The bride's mother wore a pink and black dress and a corsage of white carnations. The groom's mother wore aqua with corsage of white carnations.

A reception followed the ceremony, and Miss Romona Farnum, cousin of the bride, had charge of the guest book.

The couple left for a wedding trip and will be at home after Nov.

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

Here's a landscape which gains a "three-dimensional" feeling from the "frame" which the trees provide for the barn, from the way in which the road runs off in the distance.

Gaining Depth In Landscapes

SEVERAL months ago, in one of these columns, we discussed the use of figures in scenic shots to provide a sort of scale—something to give someone looking at the picture an idea of the true size of different objects.

At that time we also mentioned the fact that the use of a figure in this way helps to lend "depth" to your pictures—helps to give them, in effect, a three-dimensional quality. This is because the figure in the foreground contrasts with the background scene.

However, you might like to know about several other ways of getting depth in your snapshots. One of these, of course, is "framing." A landscape is said to be "framed" when an overhanging branch of a tree or some other nearby object serves to form a pleasing vista or to make a "frame" for the scene. In today's shot the trees along the road serve as a frame for the barn.

Similarly, a building may often be "framed" by shooting from another building, say through an archway or between two columns.

Still another means of getting depth in scenic shots is by including a road or stream. Either one leads your eye "into" the picture and the apparent narrowing of the road or the stream as it winds in the distance helps lend that three-dimensional feeling.

Here, too, you may want to remember to shoot from an angle and, whenever possible, include a bend in the road. A curved road, or stream, is always more interesting than a perfectly straight one.

Still another method of gaining depth in scenes is through unusual lighting. Cross lighting, which provides long shadows to lead your eye helps give you that three-dimensional feeling. So will shafts of sunlight such as you may find piercing through woodland trees.

All of these ways of producing "depth" can help you make more pleasing landscape shots—more pleasing because they make you feel you are looking into a picture instead of looking at a flat piece of paper carrying images of some objects.

NEWRY MAN FOUNDED UTAH CITY IN 1847

Ferrigline Sessions Was Early Mormon Missionary — One of Pioneers—Father of 54 Children

A Newry man helped to make history 100 years ago when he became the first settler in the city of Bountiful, Utah. The story is told in the Oct. 2 issue of the Layton, Utah, Journal, a copy of which was sent to the Citizen by a former local man, Levi Heyward, now a reader of the Citizen at Kaysville, Utah. We quote:

One hundred years ago September 29, Ferrigline Sessions came out from Salt Lake City as the first settler of Bountiful, the second oldest city in Utah. He came to the valley with the Thomas Kane group in charge of 50 people. From his diary we read: "Most of the Saints were obliged to walk on foot and many without shoes, but after four months we landed in this valley on the 24th of September, 1847, all well and not a death among the 400 souls. We stayed with the main camp for five days, then I took a herd of cattle and my family and started north. Here I made the first wagon tracks past the Hot Springs that was ever made. I traveled for ten miles before making camp." His family with him was his wife, Lucine Cull

Sessions, and their two children, Carlos and Martha Ann.

During those first years it was so dry throughout here the ground had huge cracks, large enough that cattle would fall into them and be lost. The struggle for water was constant. Indians were also one of their problems, and in 1852 a large wall was started around the settlement.

Ferrigline Sessions was born in Newry, Maine, June 15, 1814. He joined the L D S church in 1835 and came to Kirkland in 1837. He lived in Nauvoo at the time of the Prophet Joseph's death, and left there with the first pioneers, remaining in Winter Quarters until ordered to come west to the Great Salt Lake valley.

Mr Sessions spent 15 years of his life in the mission field. He had eight wives during polygamy, and was the father of 54 children, 30 sons and 24 daughters, 17 of whom are living now.

They became self-sustaining almost at once in their new settlement, raising all of their own consumption including sugarcane for their own molasses and the first molasses mill. The seeds they brought started some of the first orchards in this vicinity, and the Sessions plums were started from pits carried by Mrs Sessions in her apron pocket across the plains. Mr Sessions helped to build the first grist mill and the first saw mill in this section. All of his children and the other community children were sent to their own private school, the "Patty Sessions Academy," located just east of the Bamberger station. It was owned and run by Mr Sessions' mother, who also acted as midwife for the new settlers. She kept a record and states that she brought 3977 children into the world during her life, taking as pay anything the people had to give. She died in Bountiful at the age of 98 years and five months. Ferrigline Sessions died at 78, and was also buried in Bountiful.

The "Sessions House" was the first hotel and post office and for many years thousands of way-farers and travelers were fed and sheltered beneath its roof. It was built in 1851 where the Sessions' first camped in Bountiful, and was also used as the ward house, known as the North canyon ward house.

In 1857 the first church was started. It is the present stake house. Mr Sessions donated out-fits and work for this.

THE LOW DOWN FROM HICKORY GROVE

Well folks, these latest new kind of days—"no chicken on Thursday," "no meat on Tuesday," etc.—they give me an idea for another new kind of day. Maybe it can be squeezed in some place—and will catch on. I am calling it "no chaos day." On that day it will be quiet—nobody will break out in a lather that something has gotta be done before sundown or disaster will overtake us. If there is one thing in this land-of-the-free that we can have more of, but which does not seem to be cramping our style too much it is "threatened chaos." Chaos is hanging over our head like a chicken hawk in a barnyard.

Folks go to bed fearful of what will be on the radio at 7 next morning. Stomach ulcers and irritated dispositions come next. And anybody thinking that stomach ulcers are not our national affliction, let him hesitate for one-half second at a red stop-light. The raucous toots from behind will tell him.

My new "no chaos day," if we could arrange to have it coincide with election day, I kinda figure the quietness might help. Anybody not endorsing this idea, he might drop in on his doctor—2 to one it is his stomach.

Yours with the low down,
JO BERRA

HEALTH OF MAINE CHILDREN COULD BE IMPROVED

Most Maine children need more milk to build strong bones and healthy bodies, points out Maine Extension Circular 237, "Maine Children Can be Healthy." The new publication says Pine Tree State children need to eat fruits and vegetables every day of the kind high in vitamins A and C, and that they need at least one egg every day. The brief circular, describes a number of physical defects which are signs of improper diet. It may be obtained from county home demonstration agents or by writing to the Agricultural Extension Service, University of Maine, Orono.

CAPITOL STUFF

by Governor Horace Hildreth

Augusta, November 3.—As a result of our damaging forest fires, questions are being asked about salvage of burned timber. Forest Commissioner Raymond E. Rendell and Extension Forester A. D. Nutting make these suggestions for the owners of burned timber to consider:

Any timber trees that will continue to produce seed in Maine's burned areas should be left to grow. The hardness of the bark and the density of the tree bark are factors to take into consideration in the burned timber areas. In some areas winds carried the fire so fast that trees probably were not damaged sufficiently to kill them. It is natural and often necessary to move fast to salvage everything possible after a large fire.

The fire problem is still acute and too close at hand for most owners to start a planned salvage program. Such a salvage of timber very definitely destroyed beyond recovery can be done easiest this fall before deep snow arrives and should be under way by the middle to latter part of November.

Most owners of burned timber should make careful plans before starting their salvage cutting. It will be safe to wait until spring to know the true picture where there may be any doubt as to the severity of burn. Naturally they want to realize the most money possible from it. This means careful consideration of the best way to operate and market the timber. However, from the standpoint of land management a few facts about burned trees should be considered first.

In any fast moving fire, occasional islands or groups of green trees are left. They will be valuable as a source of seed, a cover for game, and a nucleus for restoration of forest beauty. Thick bark trees usually will survive. A light ground fire even though the butts may be fire scarred, requires that the owner look over his trees carefully before cutting to see where salvage can be postponed temporarily.

Experiences from the 1938 hurricane showed that owners who waited for the shock of disaster to pass and then planned their salvage operations came out with more profits than most of those who did not plan.

All salvageable trees will remain good until next May. Pine and spruce trees heavily burned will be attacked by wood borers from

May to October, but even during this period, if the boards are square edged, little damage should result. In fact, insect (borer) injury will lessen the tree's value but not destroy its usefulness. It is advised that all boards over one inch in thickness should be square edged. Logs not immediately sawed during the coming spring and summer should be placed in water to keep the borers out. Burned hemlock and hardwoods, affected very little by borers, can be salvaged later than pine and spruce.

Lightly burned over areas should not be planted to pine seedlings for over a year. There is likely to be a heavy loss from the Paley Weevil which swarms in on burned areas and girdle young trees that may be planted.

Timber is in good demand, which will be very beneficial in carrying out the salvage program and the volume of burned timber in Maine can be handled without disrupting lumber markets. The pulpwood market can handle all the common pulpwood species and possibly some of the white pine and hardwoods too small for lumber.

Lumber will be needed for rebuilding in area. In case some of the lumber is going to be used for home building, knowing the lengths and dimensions before cutting will pay the owner well.

There will be a tendency to bid against each other for labor, trucking, and milling. Bidding against each other should be kept to a minimum or costs will eat up all stumpage value. If labor, trucks and mills are concentrated in these areas, there should be enough to do the job without greatly increasing competition over the present. Green timber near the burned areas should be allowed to grow to lessen salvage problems and supply seed for the burned areas.

Forest survey of burned areas will commence as soon as conditions permit by foresters, entomologist, and game experts. Advice on restoration and reforestation will be publicized in the press and at group meetings during the coming year. The offices of the Maine Forest Service and the Extension Service will be available to assist timber and woodlot owners just as soon as the fires are definitely out and the problems known.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Special Session of Congress Called; Chile, Brazil Break Off With Russia; France Moves Toward Major Crisis

(Released by WNU Features.)

EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the writer and not necessarily those of this newspaper.

THE BREAKS

Chile, Brazil Kiss Russia Good-By

Acting almost simultaneously, two South American nations—Brazil and Chile—curtly announced severance of diplomatic relations with Russia because, as they both implied, they couldn't stand it any longer.

Brazil, which beat Chile to the gun by a few hours in breaking relations, had the less valid reason for its action, on the surface, at least. Stated reason for the move was given as the "extremely outrageous and even calumnious" articles in the Russian press attacking Pres. Enrico Gaspar Dutra and the Brazilian army.

Russia's Literary Gazette had called Dutra an incompetent soldier and a Fascist. It was the same magazine that had compared President Truman with Hitler, to which the U. S. strongly objected but took no further action.

Chile, however, had a more deep-seated grievance. Communist infiltration in the nation's southern zone, leading to recent labor difficulties there, undoubtedly spurred the decision to sever relations.

Chilean Pres. Gabriel Gonzalez Videla previously had accused the Communists of planning to cripple Chile's production of copper, nickel and other strategic materials.

And in a burst of thoroughness, Chile also ended diplomatic relationships with Czechoslovakia. If no other end is accomplished, the action by Brazil and Chile at least may answer the question of whether Communist penetration into a nation actually can be halted by breaking diplomatic relations with Russia.

France was sliding rapidly toward a major political crisis in its precarious postwar existence. Premier Paul Ramadier, whose cabinet had resigned following France's municipal elections in which Gen. Charles De Gaulle's Rally of the French People party achieved a surprising victory, warned his people that the existence of the nation was at stake.

FRENCH CRISIS: High Stakes

"To face a grave political situation, we found it necessary to form a concentrated government in order to give it needed authority in this hour."

Ramadier was referring to the fact that, after the resignation of his cabinet, he formed another only half as large. It was possible, however, that he had been unable to gather together a full-sized cabinet.

Significant was Ramadier's failure to include in his new group any one representing the two strongest political organizations in France—De Gaulle's party and the Communists. Ramadier clarified that position, however, with the accusation that General De Gaulle and the Communist party were following policies that could lead only to the destruction of France.

Meanwhile, the premier had more immediate worries. His streamlined cabinet was scheduled to go before an extraordinary session of the national assembly for a vote of confidence. If it fails, Ramadier and his government would resign.

NEW ATTACK: Zhdanov's Turn

"Down with the Marshall plan" was the substance of the most late revealed Russian verbal attack against the U. S. this time made by Andrei Zhdanov, member of the all-powerful Soviet Politburo.

Zhdanov, who can be considered an authoritative spokesman of Soviet foreign policy, told the recent session of the Communist congress in Poland that the U. S. is trying to "extend its power" thus apply re-stating the standard Russian wolf cry of "American imperialism."

More sobering was his declaration of Russian intention to block and destroy the Marshall plan, which he described as the chief instrument of American "imperialist policy" and as hostile to the Soviet Union.

Revelation of Zhdanov's speech in Poland makes it appear certain that the recent establishment of Communism in an international basis to the policy of the Communist bloc, the Communist information center with headquarters at Belgrade was carried out for the immediate purpose of destroying the Marshall plan in Europe.

Of equal significance is the fact that Zhdanov has brought the U. S. Russian struggle for influence in Western Europe clearly into the open by denouncing the Marshall plan and U. S. policy as imperialist, and stating Russia's intention of nullifying them. Zhdanov was admitting tacitly that Russia was warring Western Europe for herself.

IN JERUSALEM — Henry A. Wallace, vice-president of the U. S. political arena, opened that if the Dwight D. Eisenhower administration were to "Republican" or "Democratic" ticket, he would vote for the 1948 presidential election.

IN RICHMOND — The nation's newspapers today, the facts, decided that there were no more "hunger" in the nation, as announced that they would cease publishing daily "hunger" news.

IN BALTIMORE — Government agents announced that they had recovered an airplane still on the grounds of Changin's Maryland mountain retreat of the President in COPELAND. Started flying "Flying saucers," which given references to the fact of the simultaneous through the night.

FULL DEFENSE: Controls

Secretary of Defense James Forrestal had a word to say about what another war would mean to civilians. The word was government control.

He warned that any future war would bring far more stringent government controls on industry and manpower to bring about speedy total mobilization. In so doing, Forrestal fired what probably was the opening gun in his battle, as defense secretary, for a complete, nationwide, defense system.

Appearing before the senate committee investigating the national defense program, he observed that the "national security act of 1947 gives us the best machinery that the country has ever had for securing our national defense."

Two other witnesses, Thomas J. Haggrave, chairman of the national defense board, and Ferdinand Eberstadt, former vice-chairman of the war production board, seconded Forrestal's testimony that time, money and lives might have been saved in the last war if industrial mobilization plans based on World War I had been utilized far more promptly.

Consensus of the three was that strong controls in a future war must fall upon production, manpower and economic stabilization.

The government previously had announced its plans for mobilizing industry, stockpiling strategic materials and keeping a number of munitions plants available on a standby basis.

U. S. ANSWER: Restrained

U. S. citizens have the satisfaction of knowing their government is not following an eye-for-an-eye philosophy in its relations with Russia in the United Nations.

Warren R. Austin, U. S. delegate, in a strong policy speech, refrained from answering Andrei Vishinsky's war-mongering speeches "in kind," but instead appealed to the U. N. to reject Soviet demands for curbs on free speech.

Vishinsky had demanded that the United Nations take steps to prevent what he called "war-mongering" talk in the United States.

Implied attitude of the U. S. was that it had no intention of being drawn into a mud-slinging contest with Russia, it would simply state its position without resorting to the kind of invective that Soviet delegates have been employing.

Said Austin of Vishinsky's latest speech: "Mr. Vishinsky's speech is part of the propaganda campaign designed generally to discredit the government and people of the United States and to cast doubt upon the sincerity of their peaceful intentions."

The Mahatma Pleads

Mahatma K. Gandhi, India's little man of great strength, is shown addressing a mass meeting at New Delhi, where he called for an end of the factional strife that has caused the slaughter of thousands of Muslims and Hindus since the inauguration of the two independent partition states of Pakistan and the Dominion of India.

FOOD GOAL: Christmas

Steering the nation's food conservation efforts, the President's food committee has set up a new goal for the culmination of the drive. It wants to finish by Christmas.

Dubbed the "kitchen cabinet" by Washington smarties, the committee has adopted this slogan, coined by its chairman, Charles Luckman "Out of the kitchen by Christmas."

Hurrying to finish the first lap in the campaign to help feed starving Europeans by saving 100 million bushels of American grain this winter, the committee says it is determined to close the kitchen as soon as that amount is assured.

THERMOSTAT: Food Control

Most persons when they get hungry, don't stop to wonder what makes them that way. They just eat if they can afford it.

Despite this colossal indifference, Yale medical school researchers have reported that an "appetite thermostat" exists in the brain which only tells you when you should eat but controls your food intake so you don't put away too much and put on too much fat.

Washington Digest
Former Minnesota Governor
Is Playing Lone Wolf RoleBy BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

(This is the third of a series on the men most talked about as candidates for the Republican presidential nomination.)

WASHINGTON.—When the bakers were down in Washington sweating out a grain conservation program for their industry, my friend from Minnesota, Harry W. Zinsmeister, who is what the personal column calls a "frequent visitor" in the capital, gave a little luncheon for his colleagues and some press and radio men.

We had finished eating and were gathered around to listen to the bakers' troubles when suddenly the door opened and 220 pounds of blond, smiling, political potentiality burst upon us.

Our host shouted a happy "Hello, Harold!" then turned and announced: "Gentlemen, the next President of the United States."

I daresay most Minnesota Republicans will say "aye" to that. What the rest of the country says is awaited with interest by the candidate.

I suppose I have had 50 people ask me about Harold Stassen. "Why hasn't Stassen a chance?" they query.

Most observers seem to agree that if he has a chance, it's a pretty slim one to date.

The reason is always the same: The professional politicians don't want him.

Not because he's a political "unknown." He could hardly be called that. Sure he took the job of county chairman at the age of 21. He was elected governor of Minnesota three times, could have been senator from that state, had he wanted the job.

In his case, it's not so much that he's a newcomer as it is the way he came up. That way is characteristic of his whole campaign, and two words describe it: "Lone wolf."

The situation favored Stassen when he forced his way into the gubernatorial race in 1938. Minnesota was in a bad way. There was vandalism and corruption, and the Farmer-Labor party, which had held a tight grip on the state, was disintegrating through its own weakness and graft.

Stassen entered the race against the wishes of the Republican Old Guard, but he eventually forced them to help him to some degree. It was largely his own efforts, however, that elected him.

In other words, "he butted into the governorship," according to old guard critics. Others say he did it merely as a step to the presidency, and that it was part of his overweening ambition—the same thing they say about Governor Dewey of New York. But the old guard fears Stassen's type of ambition more than Dewey's. They fear it because they feel that should Stassen become president, he might build up a strong personal following and thus get a stranglehold on the Republican party.

For a while, it was said that no one knew where Stassen stood, but gradually he has made some very definite statements, the very definiteness of which is another thing the professional politicians object to. For instance, last month he said flatly that the American people should cut down their food consumption by 15 per cent. Just as flatly, he called for an immediate session of congress to deal with the aid-to-Europe program. Conventional candidates don't commit themselves too heavily. His supporters claim that Stassen is a middle-of-the-roader, a little to the left. But it is not too much his liberal.

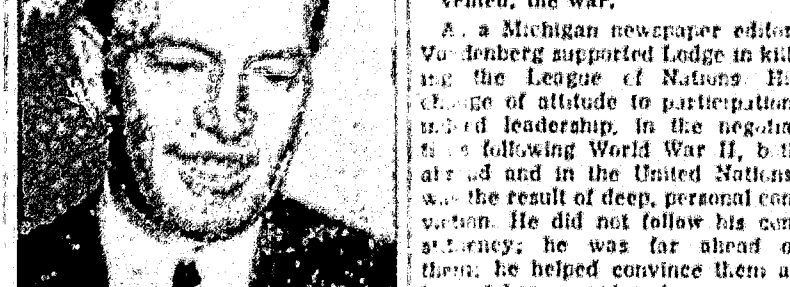

A part of Vandenberg's influence in the field of foreign affairs is due to the fact that he has the enthusiasm of a convert. He was once frankly an isolationist. Today he has converted many others, and I believe that no single man has done more than he to break down the provincial attitude, especially in the Midwest, which before World War II prevented America from taking leadership in world affairs—leadership which might have postponed, if not entirely prevented, the war.

A Michigan newspaper editor Vandenberg supported Lodge in killing the League of Nations. His change of attitude to participation, leadership in the negotiations following World War II, both abroad and in the United Nations, was the result of deep, personal conviction. He did not follow his constituency; he was far ahead of them. He helped convince them as he had been convinced.

It has been suggested that Vandenberg's age would prevent him from accepting the presidency, for he would be 64 when inaugurated. As a matter of fact, he is just six weeks older than President Truman.

I do not believe that he is actually eliminated from the nomination, but we can be certain he will not fight for the job. He had the high vote at the Republican convention of 1940 when the Wilkie blitz struck.

Vandenberg's support of bi-partisan policy doesn't mean that he gives a blank check to the administration. He favors the Marshall plan and aid to Greece and Turkey, but he refused to recognize that aid as the "Truman Doctrine," insisting it was not a doctrine at all.

HAROLD STASSEN
Does he have a chance?

ality to which the politicians object. I doubt if any practical politician expects us to turn back the clock. But in his highly unorthodox campaigning, Stassen has violated two rules.

One, by announcing himself early in the present campaign. Today he is the only official candidate for the presidential nomination.

Two, he has made and he repeats sharp criticism of the Republican program.

As Roscoe Drummond of the Christian Science Monitor puts it, "If they pick him to ride the elephant, they'll have to get a new

"Adam and Fallen Man" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon that will be read in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, Nov. 9.

The Golden Text is: "Ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light" (Ephesians 5: 8).

The citations from the Bible include the following passages: "And the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept; and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh therefor: And the rib, which the Lord God had taken from man, made he a woman, and brought her unto man" (Genesis 2: 21-22).

The Lesson-Sermon also includes the following selections from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "God never slumbers, and His likeness never dreams. Mortals are the Adam dreamers. What indicates the fall of man or the opposite of God or God's absence, in the Adam-dream, for it is not begotten of the Father" (pages 249, 21-23 and 228: 28-31).
